He also encouraged students to attend the MOF special Examination the following day. Lu Yunbin warned that if one's learning experience lacks discourse and exchanges with friends, there is a danger that the student may become ignorant and ill-informed (獨學而無友，則孤陋而寡聞 [from classical Chinese literature]) as a way of encouraging students leaving Taiwan to broaden their horizons.

Returning student Zou Chieh-min shared her experiences as an exchange student, saying that prior to leaving Taiwan, an exchange student should first check out any organizations there might be for international students at the school he or she plans to study at. In addition, she said, take note of the etiquette involved when interacting with host families in that country as a way of more quickly blending in there. She also passed along some study methods like borrowing pens from classmates and talking with professors when encountering barriers to learning. In addition to studying, she encouraged younger students to use vacation times to get away from the university for the opportunity to gain eye-opening experiences.

Third-year Japanese language student Su Yu-wen will soon be an exchange student at Doshisha University in Japan, and greeted everyone fluent Japanese, comparing this opportunity to study abroad with what a professor said during her second year of school: "Learning a language, you need courage to speak out."
